violence or non-violence

The question is not whether property destruction is violent if it doesn't injure another person, nor is it whether the cops are violent, but whether the terms violence and its binary opposite, non-violence, are useful at all when they trap us between two poles and limit our options. Life is not an either-or proposition. If post-structuralism can be useful in anarchist theory, its usefulness might be found in its critique of binaries like these.